

*Jaqueline H. Arroyo
CEO and Founder
Afro-Cuban Alliance, Inc*

“Change We Can Believe in!”

For many the words “Change we can believe in” are more than just a campaign theme associated with Barack Obama’s historic presidential run. It is a rally cry for all those individuals that know that they are missing out on the opportunities and fortunes that their country offers.

The phrase “Change we can believe in” is not just a slogan for millions of people but rather a steady drum beat for all those who have been marginalized or subjugated in their homeland.

The words “Change that we can believe in” for many represent the hope for better todays and even better tomorrows.

For some, “Change that we can believe in” represents the dream for our future and our children’s future.

On Thursday, August 28, 2008, on the 45th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s “I Have a Dream” speech, millions of people all over the world watched as Senator Barack Obama accepted the Democratic Party’s nomination for President of the United States of America before a crowd of more than 70,000 people.

“With profound gratitude and great humility, I accept your nomination for the presidency of the United States.”

From Nairobi to Chicago, from Singapore to Havana, the eyes of the world watched as the first African-American politician was selected to run for President by a mainstream political party.

The question on the minds of many:
Is Barack Obama the right man, at the right time, in the right place?

The answer to this question will be revealed on November 4, 2008 when the American people make their choice for President of the United States of America.