INT. BAR - DAY

OSWALD sits at the bar. His clown make-up has been removed but he still wears his costume. In the background, TWO PATRONS sing Rue Britannica without knowing the words.

STACE (O.S.)
One Old-Fashioned!

A fancy drink slams down on the counter. OSWALD is about to drink when he realizes the bartender -- STACE -- is staring at him. She's a sturdy Midwestern woman in her forties.

He pretends not to notice her.

STACE (CONT'D)
You're that clown!

OSWALD
Excuse me?

STACE
Yeah... With the face, and the funny voice, and the nose.

OSWALD
Doctor Oswald Wonderful.

STACE
Right! You look different, without the nose.

OSWALD
It's fake.

STACE
I guess so.
(Calling out:)
Hey everybody, we got a clown!

STACE (CONT'D)
Hey. Shouldn't you be out there?

OSWALD Mm?

STACE
You're not marching, shouldn't you be marching?

OSWALD

I don't want to talk about it.
I saw your show. Last year. My daughter quoted you for weeks.

OSWALD (CONT'D)

(It's not wonderful.)
Wonderful.

STACE

Kaylee. Is her name. See?

STACE points to a picture above the bar: a plump little girl.

OSWALD

She's. Lovely.

STACE

She's six. Most kids her age are scared of clowns. Not her. She's tough. She wanted to be one of the kids you called on, go on stage, make a fool of herself.
She wanted some Wondrous Whatsits.
What are they, M&M's?

OSWALD

They don't have the letter on them.

PATRON 1

The Boy Scouts.

STACE

Aww.

PATRON 2

Look at those costumes.

OSWALD

They're wearing knickers and newsboys caps. That's not technically Victorian.

STACE

It's the spirit that counts.

(To a PATRON.)

I always liked the Victorian thing. Queen Victoria. She didn't need some guy hanging off her, running around on her. She knew that was trouble. Smart lady.

OSWALD

That was Queen Elizabeth.

STACE

You sure?

OSWALD

Queen Victoria married her cousin.
